Quake kills 200-plus on SF freeway

Crews work to remove bodies, rubble from wreckage on Nimitz highway

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Crews worked non-stop today to extricate motorists from twisted metal and concrete that was an elevated highway before Tuesday's earthquake. Officials fear 200 people died in the collapse.

Teams of police and firefighters "have spent the night searching with dogs in those areas that are accessible," said police Lt. Sidney Rice. Officials "will evaluate the structure and a search for possible survivors in not readily accessible areas will be conducted as soon as possible."

Shortly before dawn, a hook-and-ladder truck moved alongside the Nimitz Freeway, which had been a section of Interstate 80. It stopped periodically to let firefighters shine lights into gaps. There was no word of any survivors.

Screams and the crash of metal brought bystanders to the scene on Tuesday.

George Donovan, a truck driver, was on the upper deck in a tractor-trailer rig when the quake hit.

"The pavement started to move. I had waves of asphalt come up over my windshield," he said. "It was undulating all around me. It was like a Disney ride."

Police said 56 bodies had been taken to a makeshift morgue near the scene, and seven other bodies had been taken to the coroner's office early today.

"You could hear it crunching down — but you couldn't see anything. It was just a big white cloud," Leroy FitzGerald said after Tuesday's earthquake knocked down a mile-long section of the highway's upper level onto the bottom lanes.

"You could hear people screaming for help," said FitzGerald, who works at a nearby auto parts shop.

Late Tuesday, high on the upper deck of the Nimitz Freeway, rescuers walked, their flashlights shining in the darkness as they worked amid the wreckage that became a vast grave for motorists caught in the collapse.

When the 18-block stretch of highway caved in, workers from businesses in the heavy industrial area ran to help, many bringing tall ladders and forklifts.

A passerby, Patrick MacIntyre, said rescuers were able to pull one man alive from a car that was crushed to a height of 18 inches.

In another rescue, emergency workers pulled a girl from the wreckage of an automobile. The fate of her parents was not known.

Late Tuesday, rescuers worked to save the unidentified girl's brother.

A three-member surgical team was forced to amputate the right leg of the 7-year-old boy who was trapped in a car for seven hours.

He was finally removed from the wreckage at 12:15 a.m. car-

Counselors tell students to remain calm, wait for news

By Jill Newhouse
Staff Writer

It is easy in times of disaster to assume the worst and let your imagination fly, said a Cal Poly counselor.

However, said Dr. Jim Aiken of the Counseling Center, that is the worst thing to do.

Because many Cal Poly students have friends and family in the Bay Area, the recent earthquake could have significant effects of their emotions, he said.

"I doubt we at the Counseling Center will see many students because of the quake," Aiken said. "If students do find out there has been some personal

Students anxious to contact families

The Northern California earthquake Tuesday evening sent shock waves through the San Luis Obispo community.

Although the county Sheriff's Department reported no damage here, many residents felt the quake, centered in the mountains near Santa Cruz about 150 miles north along the San Andreas fault. The fault runs north and south just 35 miles east of San Luis Obispo.

Anxiety was high on campus as the severity of the damage became known to the large portion of Cal Poly students who come from the San Jose/San Francisco Bay Area.

"I was in Mustang Stadium at the field rehearsal for the marching band," said Susan Cisneros, a liberal studies senior. "We could see the light poles swaying even though we couldn't feel the ground shake. When I found out later how bad it was, I worried about my boyfriend in South San Francisco."

Tammie Fowler, who lives near

Laguna Lake, saw "the fireplace moving back and forth and the doors and windows shake."

Cal Poly Geology Professor David Chipping, who has taught courses on earthquakes, said the Student ham radio operators have been putting in hours of emergency community service since the San Francisco earthquake Tuesday evening.

Thor Rasmussen, an electronic engineering junior, reported that the Cal Poly Amateur Radio Club got into gear within half an hour of the disaster to help local residents check on family and friends in the quake zone.

The 30-member group is headquartered in the "Ham Shack" at the base of the big antenna in

Reporter's Notebook

Party now, pay after graduation

By Ken A. Forkus

The dream of most Cal Poly students is to graduate in four years (good luck) and then land a prestigious job that includes a large compensation package.

For most of us, our college schedule includes going to classes in the late morning to midafternoon, homework for maybe a few hours in the evening and going out at night.

Monday night students go to the (Tortilla) Flats; Wednesday night means the Graduate; Thursdays are Farmers Markets; and Friday and Saturdays are for parties wherever.

However, this route, while great fun and full of outrageous memories, does not help you find a job at the end of your college career — unless you want to be a career beer drinker.

Recently I began to search for a career-related job, and was rudely awakened. "I'm sorry, you have great qualifications, but we have four other people applying with 20 years of experience," they say.

If I had a dime for every person I heard say this, I could retire on dimes.

Maybe in looking back, those part-time jobs some of my friends had were not such bad ideas. Sure I worked while at Cal Poly — bartending.

Instead, maybe I should have taken a cut in college wages and worked somewhere I could gain some experience in my field of study.

Don't get me wrong, Cal Poly does give you a wide range of classes to help you receive a well-rounded education. However, all the people you are going against in job searching also have well-rounded educations and basically the same background as you.

So the way to really get an advantage is to first make an accurate and concise resume. Don't forget to add all activities and organizations you have been involved with, even if they seem minor to you.

But even after you have passed the resume screening, you are still a long way from being hired, since the next step is an interview process that may entail anywhere from three to six interviews. This is when you have to hope (and that's all you can do) that your personality fits the companies'.

Finally, after all the B.S. you go through to get a job, you have to decide if it's really what you want to do for maybe the next 35 years.

Honig plans education summit

State School Superintendent Bill Honig is demonstrating that when it comes to education summits, any number can play. On the heels of the president's meeting at the University of Virginia, Honig now proposes his own state summit — in part to follow up on the objectives of the national summit; in part to demonstrate when it comes to such things as performance goals, California is a couple of steps ahead of the nation.

Because the states have prime responsibility for, and immediate control of, public schools, a great deal more can come of a state summit, provided all parties are willing to use it for something more than an occasion for political posturing.

Honig has invited Gov. George Deukmejian, whose people say he might or might not show up. If Deukmejian were to work with Honig in trying to make such a discussion a success, the state would have a far better chance of dealing with the immense educational problems it confronts.

The obvious place to begin is in a review of the reforms that have been instituted in this state in the past six years. Honig believes substantial progress has been made toward at least some of the goals that the state set itself — in upgrading the academic content of the courses California high school students take, for example, and in a vast increase in the enrollment in advanced placement courses and other advanced high school programs.

At the same time, the problems — in dropout rates, in the growing enrollment of poor and non-English speaking children and in general academic failure — remain enormous. Such a review would thus serve as a way of determining what is and isn't working and also as a base for evaluating future reforms.

In following up on the objective of establishing performance goals, which was at the top of the list of the national summit's agenda, Honig would like to implement mandatory standardized statewide achievement testing in various academic fields at the high school level, both to evaluate students and to give schools feedback on their teaching.

But that's only a beginning of an agenda, which should include the adequacy of teacher training in the state's public colleges; means of increasing accountability at individual schools and engaging teachers in school-site management; upgrading coordination, quality and delivery of social services; and upgrading the academic climate both in the schools and in the community. Such objectives require participation not only by legislators and educators, but also by a range of people from other areas.

The governor now has a chance to exercise leadership in implementing the process that, as a member of the Bush summit, he cheered with such enthusiasm.

Letters to the Editor

Column demeans college president

Editor — I am writing in response to the column written by Christine J. Pocan entitled, "Poly president's role questioned" (Oct. 16). I was shocked to see any student write such a demeaning column on the president of our school.

I feel that Pocan was simply using Warren J. Baker as a scapegoat for all the mishaps and problems she has with the city of San Luis Obispo. I feel that her column was written simply out of a lack of respect for the president.

The president has every right not to get involved in SLO politics, as his position is simply to better our university. Just because Baker is not the most visible person on campus, does not mean he does nothing for our school.

Baker is constantly dealing with people in the business world (such as executives from large corporations) and educational fields in hopes of making Cal Poly an even more prestigious school.

Our president is not "oblivious" to local issues. It's just not his place to partake of the political actions of our city. This is the same reason ASI does not specifically support one candidate for the city mayoral race. It simply is not our place.

Gays need not tell sexual preference

Editor — This need for "coming out" in your paper recently has me a little disturbed.

I should state first that I am not one who applies blanket judgments over any group or minority. I have worked with some homosexuals and interacted with them as a friend without reservation or discomfort.

However, when in my own private times of meditation I consider the subject, the answer from every perspective always comes back in some variation of: "There's something that isn't right about homosexuality."

But back to "coming out." If we're talking about a sexual preference, then why is there a need for anyone to publicly proclaim their own?

I am, in fact, happily married, and I have never felt the need to announce to the world that some of our sexual postions might deviate from the norm of the majority, and I don't think most people have.

If you're gay, fine. I hope you question the basis of all your beliefs just like me or anyone else so we may continue to grow in our understanding of the truth.

The need, however, to "come out" tends to indicate to me a deep-rooted doubt about your present sexuality or a self identity that is based to a very unhealthy degree on sex.

If I am wrong in this, then why are you telling me?

Not knowing: The hardest part

By Alison Skratt

"We're sorry but all lines are busy ... AT&T 65423. Click."

"The phone company is urging those trying to reach those in the Bay Area not to use the phone. It ties up lines needed for emergency services."

Beep. Beep. Beep. Beep. Beep. Beep ...

"Here is some dramatic footage taped by tourists from Oklahoma. Look closely as it shows the 50-foot section of the Bay Bridge that collapsed. Be sure to watch as a car realizes too late that the road has fallen away ..."

Beep. Beep. Beep. Beep. Beep. Beep ...

"And with me is Wayne Smith from Seattle, who was in the upper mezzanine just under the overhang lip of Candlestick Park. So tell us, Wayne, what was it like?"

"Well, Joe, I saw the lights start to sway and was pretty calm. But I did find this 40-pound chunk of concrete in the stands as a souvenir."

"We're sorry but all lines are busy ... AT&T 65423. Beep. Beep. Beep. Beep ..."

Was it a dream? People here walk to class, deliver the mail, go to work and teach their classes. There are only the blaring headlines of the newspaper to breathe life into the panic, frustrating paralysis and self-inflicted hysteria of the night before.

Myself and approximately 3,000 other Cal Poly students have no choice but to play by the rules set out by physical limitations.

We thank God for the technology that put us in the air over San Francisco less than 45 minutes after the quake and curse the same media for not taking us right to the homes of those we desperately want to reach for confirmation that our world had not fallen apart on an afternoon that started as serenely as any other here on the Central Coast.

Most local residents are glued to their sets, along with the rest of the country, thinking about friends or people they knew in the Bay Area. But then there are those of us who wish to heaven we could turn off the updated reports, but cannot. Perhaps in the next few minutes they'll reveal that vital clue that will turn our imaginations around, we think, just for a few minutes, please.

Forget starting to study for that exam tomorrow. Forget asking your friends (who also have people to worry about) to come over and help steady your mind as you find anything to do that will not require thought on your part.

I wash the dishes, clean my desk, my closet, the family room. I find myself repeatedly turning back to the street map of San Francisco I found in my glove compartment, estimating how far my sister's apartment is from the Marina District — about 15 blocks from the major fire, but still along a steep hill on California near Fillmore.

From the other room I hear something about a riot, but Ted Koppel cuts away for a phone interview with the governor, on an official trip to Frankfurt, West Germany.

At least 1 million PG&E customers are without service and dusk is falling on the city by the bay. Some looting is reported.

No one is reporting on the South Bay, even though it is closer to the quake's epicenter. I pace the floor, my dog glancing up quizzically from her corner of the room.

I curse at the television. "Tell me what I want to know!" I scream. I flip from network to network until I settle on CNN. They won't cut away to the Cosby Show, I think to myself. I quickly find their coverage is lacking, so it's back to the networks.

Not only can't I reach the Bay Area, but I can't call relatives and friends on the East Coast to let them know what little I've found out.

Rumors abound as I call friends throughout San Luis Obispo.

After five and a half hours, a call from my father, in Houston on business, lets me know all are safe and accounted for.

My pulse starts to calm. My mind lets go as I fall into an exhausted, fitful sleep.

Wednesday morning seems normal enough, with a message flashing on the machine.

Like a blessed voice from another world, I hear my mother's words:

"It's about 6:20 in the morning here, and I don't know whether or not you're in class or sleeping after last night. But I know you probably heard through the grapevine that Mom's OK and Lisa's OK and Wendy's OK and we're all really grateful that were were the lucky ones. So, I'm hoping everything's OK down at your end. A little worried about that darn nuclear plant and, um, that your house fared OK. Well, I love you, and you take care of yourself. Looks like we made it again, huh? Goodbye for now."

Yep, we made it again, Mom. Thank God.

tragedy, they will probably go home — get away from here."

But it is important for students to get as much information as possible about the earthquake before they jump to conclusions, he said.

"It is important for students to listen to newscasts and get the facts," said Aiken. "They should try not to imagine the worst."

Based on fall 1987 and 1988 figures from Institutional Studies, about 25 percent of the students at Cal Poly are from the Bay Area.

About 1,980 students were from Alameda, San Francisco, Santa Clara and Santa Cruz counties — the counties hit hardest by the quake.

"The number usually stays the same," said Elaine Ramos Doyle, director of Institutional Studies.

Melanie Serres, a ornamental horticulture senior, has relatives in San Francisco and, at first, hearing of the earthquake caused a lot of anxiety.

"I was so scared and worried about my family last night," Serres said, "but I knew there was nothing I could do about it until someone called me and told me what was happening. It doesn't help anyone to be pessimistic."

Serres did eventually hear from her relatives, late Tuesday night, and was relieved to learn that everyone was all right.

For people who have not heard from loved ones, however, the stress is still apparent.

Many students cannot get through to the area, Aiken said, and emotions are flying high.

"Students need to temper their imaginations with reality," Aiken said.

Cal Poly counselor Elie Axelroth said many students may experience nightmares and other signs of anxiety due to the earthquake.

"Students who have relatives in the immediate area, or students who have experienced a damaging earthquake firsthand will be the strongest affected," Axelroth said.

The Berkeley Shakespeare Festival will take on a new title when it moves to Orinda next year, becoming the California Shakespeare Festival.

Lura Dolas and Charles Shaw Robinson star as the couple Beatrice and Benedick, respectively, with Julian Robinson Morillas co-starring as Dogberry. Hero is played by Nadie Mozon.

the evening was filled with well-crafted lyrics of honesty and and sly words against the Earth's concerns and society's weaknesses.

Opening with "B-side of Life" with Pat and Barbara MacDonald playing the guitar and tamborine, respectively, the couple sang together in a real cute way — cute to the point where it was too cute.

But the cuteness was extinguished quickly with their second song, "National Holiday." The song started off with a pre-recorded snippet of sousa marching, followed by the guitar and harmonica joining in. Immediately both MacDonalds met each other's voice, putting out the harmony that has been a trademark for as long as the two have been together.

Timbuk 3's message at times carried too much social commentary. At a time in the concert when a light-hearted song may have been appropriate, Timbuk 3 kept the message the same, song after song. Still, the lyrics are strong and make you think.

One of the more prominent songs was "Standard White Jesus." The song shows how the duo dares to write about what matters.

In fact, simplicity was what made this concert. Signature sounds on a typical Timbuk 3 recording are elements like syncopated guitar, harmonica, violin and electronic drums. But what made Timbuk 3 so enlightening in a live setting was the lack of electronic instruments and the talents of the MacDonalds.

Council passes housing ordinance

Final regulations to apply to all city single-family units

By Steve Jones
Staff Writer

An amended version of the controversial rental ordinance passed at Tuesday's City Council meeting.

The Commercial Residential Use ordinance magically became the High Density Residential Use ordinance after Councilmember Penny Rappa's surprise proposal that the ordinance should apply to owner-occupied dwellings as well as rentals.

"To make this ordinance non-discriminatory and a beginning point," Rappa said, "I would like to see it applied to all units in the R-1 and R-2 neighborhoods."

Although Rappa was the first councilmember to propose the change, it is not a new idea. Council staff has repeatedly told the council that the ordinance would be more "defensible" if it were applied across the board.

"I have advised the council that they would have more defensible an ordinance if the set standards were applied uniformly," said Jeff Jorgenson, an attorney advising the council on this issue, "regardless of whether they are owner-occupied or rentals."

The ordinance passed by a 3-1 vote, with Mayor Ron Dunin abstaining due to a conflict of interest and the dissenting vote coming from Councilmember Jerry Reiss who said he didn't like the ordinance.

"I don't think it addresses all the issues it needs to address," Reiss said. "It doesn't address both sides of the equation... I just don't feel the urgency for putting this into effect."

The ordinance will probably go into effect on March 14 but will not affect existing leases. The council voted to extend the usual 30 day grace period after final passage to 90 days.

ASI President and Student-Community Liaison Committee representative Ricardo Echeverria said he was happy the council adopted two of his committee's recommendations. The first was the application of the ordinance to both rentals and owner-occupied homes. The second was not applying any of the ordi-

RADIO

Engineering East.

"KCPR was the first to put our message on the air that we were taking calls to try and locate people up there," said James Wood, vice-president of the club. "Since it was impossible to telephone into the area, we'd take a phone number, radio up to the Emergency Net that ham operators had set up, give them the number and ask them to call and check on the people there. They'd radio a message back to us and we'd contact the folks down here."

"One elderly couple came in here to call their children," he said. "I think we've been filling an important need."

So far the students have received about 200 calls from other students and members of the community. They have been successful in getting through to 50 to 60 people in the quake area. So far no one contacted had been injured, he said.

"We called other radio stations and a few TV stations to let them know we were offering this service," Wood said.

The ham operators were temporarily shut down Wednesday morning due to the normal policy of staying off the air from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. so as not to interfere with the regular electronic engineering labs. But special permission to operate was granted by President Warren J. Baker and Department Head Martin Kaliski, he said.

"We were back on the air at 12:30 p.m. Wednesday," Wood said. "Luckily we just had a workshop on our last field day in emergency training."

QUAKE

Laguna Lake area would be "like a miniature Mexico City" if hit by an earthquake as severe as the one that hit the Bay Area because it is located on sedimentary soil, which magnifies earthquake waves.

Chipping explained earthquakes in a simple way.

"Think of the San Andreas Fault as a long zipper on a sleeping bag," he explained. "The thing unzips during a quake, until it gets stuck on a snag that holds it there 'til the next time."

Los Osos, where Chipping lives, is built on several hundred feet of sedimentary deposits.

"When the quake hit at 5:05 p.m., our table was pitching to and fro, and a ceiling light fixture didn't stop swinging until five minutes after it was over," Chipping said.

Since Cal Poly is built on relatively hard sandstone, the quake was not very noticeable there, he said. A seismograph machine on campus has not been functioning for quite some time, so the quake could not be monitored at Cal Poly.

The San Luis Obispo County area seems to experience a quake "about every 22 years," Chipping said. "The last one was around 1966, so we were sort of expecting one in '88."

Though earthquakes are impossible to predict, Chipping said they follow certain patterns given the peculiarities of the faults in this area.

The San Andreas Fault runs straight up the eastern side of San Luis Obispo County about 60 miles northeast of the city of San Luis Obispo near the town of Parkfield just over the border of Kings County, Chipping said.

Ten miles north of the town, the fault bends to the north-northeast at a four-degree angle to create a "kink" in the zipper.

Chipping said a quake would probably originate from the south and would travel up the fault and snag on the Parkfield kink, making the epicenter there.

The Parkfield area is "one of the most heavily instrumented areas of the world" because of its unique formation, he said. Scientists have placed a number of seismographs in the area.

"So if we had a quake with an epicenter 60 miles from us, we'd be safe if the magnitude were not above 6 (on the Richter scale)," he said. "There would probably be minor damage in Paso Robles. But above 6, San Luis Obispo would be like Coalinga — all these old structures downtown would be in shambles."

Geophysics Professor Ken Hoffman, who teaches a course called "Earthquakes and Earth Hazards" at Cal Poly, explained that the difference between a magnitude 6 and magnitude 7 quake is 32 times in terms of the energy released, and an increase of 10 in terms of ground motion.

Hoffman expressed concern about the nearby Diablo Canyon nuclear power plant.

Chipping, however, said he considers the reactor to be "over-built." During Diablo's construction, he said, the Hosgri Fault was discovered two miles offshore, forcing a major redesign of the plant so it would withstand a close earthquake.

The reactor did not suffer any damage from Tuesday's quake, said Susan Houghton, a public affairs representative for PG&E. She reported an "unusual event," however, when sensitive seismographs set off an automatic alarm system. Unit 2 was back in full operation Wednesday morning.

Unit 1 of the reactor was already shut down for routine maintenance.

COUNCIL

nance specifications, such as minimum square footage per person and parking restrictions, to dwellings with five or fewer adults.

"I think that the entire ordinance is a bad idea, but the fact that they passed it with some of our recommendations was good, so we got two significant ones in there," said Echeverria.

He and fellow committee member Alan Vander Horst applauded Rappa's application of the ordinance across the board, but said her move was politically motivated.

This year, students have registered to vote in record numbers. In a Telegram-Tribune interview last week, Rappa said a high student voter turnout would have a "negative effect" on her campaign.

The ordinance specifies that single-family homes with six or more adult occupants require an administrative use permit. Approval of use permits will be based on "compatibility" of the rental in a given neighborhood and compliance with given "performance standards."

These standards include a minimum of 300 square feet of floor area per adult (minus garage), at least one bathroom per three adult occupants, and at least one off-street parking space per occupant, less one. The dwelling also must meet all current health, safety and fire codes.

This ordinance will be enforced on a complaint basis. That is, neighbors of a problem house will alert city officials of the situation. The city will then follow up with a written inquiry. If the response is inconclusive, city officials will then conduct an inspection of the premises.

City Council write-in candidate David Blaine, the only speaker against the ordinance, proposed re-zoning areas in the immediate vicinity of Cal Poly for large group housing. His proposal was met with criticism by the council.

ried down a 20-foot ladder and taken to an ambulance that took him to a hospital.

Darius Brewer, a 26-year-old cook, joined an impromptu rescue party. The group crawled as far as possible under the crushed roadway to help injured motorists. They used crowbars to pry open one auto and tied ropes around an elderly man to lower him 20 feet to safety.

"Then we went on top of the second deck and just mostly got everybody down we could. People were yelling and screaming," he said. "Some people were yelling 'I'm hurt! I'm hurt!'"

Susan Kato of Alameda was on the road just past the Cypress Street exit — the center of the worst-hit span — when she felt the rolling. Suddenly, cars within a few dozen feet of her vanished.

She, along with others, backed off and got off at Cypress.

"I could see people alive and screaming. I don't know how anyone could have survived," she said.

Hundreds of workers tried to pry survivors from a tiny gap left between the levels.

"There's a one-and-a-half-foot crawlspace where they're trying to extricate them," police Lt. Sidney Rice said. "I guess there's 20 cars trapped in there."

Parts of the buckled structure resembled a roller coaster, with huge slabs of concrete skewed at all angles.

Chunks of pulverized concrete littered the streets for blocks, leaving a dusty smell in the air.
